

Month of Mother's day: The Special Role of a Mother

A mother is a person that knows, accepts and understands her child like no one ever will. "Mom" is a universal yet unique title. The world is full of loving mothers that are each considered the most important person to their children. The relationship between a mother and her child is full of warmth and no other relationship can measure up to it.

Mothers worry about their children from the moment they know they are pregnant until their children grow old. They constantly desire the best for them and try to provide them with all they have. Even though children are often satisfied with the affection offered, nevertheless mothers always believe they can give even more.

Each mother has a unique background, education, age and experience with parenting. However, one common ground of any mothering style is the flexibility in tailoring motherhood in accordance to the child's changing needs. The willingness of the mother to make the child her number one priority is enough to make them feel loved and accepted.

A child's need for their mother varies with age. During the early years of childhood, it is crucial for the child to spend quality time with the mother. Mothers often choose to be a friend to their child yet keep their responsibility of providing ethical and moral guidance. A mother is firm in discipline but is also kindhearted and tender. Overprotective is what most children tend to describe their mothers as. It is normal for mothers to be protective, yet a good mother enables the child to develop as an individual that learns from experiences.

A mother resembles a person who is a good listener and a shoulder to cry on. Mothers patiently listen to their children's problems and provide them with quality advice to help them out. She is usually approachable which helps the child open up and share their secrets. The mother's efforts to know her children will provide a secure and sturdy foundation for the child to grow as an independent individual.

In addition to listening out to problems, a mother plays a role in encouraging her child to reach their potential. She does not only work on bringing out the best in the child, but also remedies their weakness and flaws through her assistance. The absence of a mother's assistance can induce feelings of disappointment in case the child fails to succeed in a task.

Children often believe that their mothers make a big deal about knowing their whereabouts and who their friends are. It is important that mothers support whatever activity their children engage in. In cases where mothers don't approve of their child's behavior they should let them know in a nice manner. Good mothers show disapproval without losing the child's high regard of her.

Mothers tend to be a great influence and inspiration for their children. The mother's role goes beyond raising and nurturing a child. A mother symbolized strength and integrity that binds a family together. As a result, mothers are considered positive and moral role models that mold their children into confident, successful and pure individuals.

When describing one's mother every person becomes inspired by a fountain of emotions at heart. Children owe what they are to the mothers who sacrificed every desire to raise them. The unconditional love of mothers is every man's primary wealth and treasure!

Remy Elias Psychologist
www.nawfalclinics.com